LegalTech refers to the technology-led innovation that either helps facilitate the practice of law for lawyers or enables consumers and businesses to access legal expertise or justice. LegalTech is not restricted to the regulated legal sector – innovation can come from non-regulated organisations and activities.

This includes:

- Legal tech – legal technology relating to the application of new technology to the legal sector to enhance the effectiveness of the provision and delivery of legal services.
- Lawtech – disruptive technologies or firms who are focussed on disrupting the sector through technology.
- Innovation - refers to impactful change, which can be non-technological or involve elements of technology, including changes to business models and structure.

As part of LegalTech in Leeds we will encourage challenging questions to be addressed about the broader defining characteristics of the legal sector, such as: What is the optimal business plan for a modern law firm? What is the most valuable role of tech in the sector and how does this align to existing business models? What are the opportunities of data? How imminent is the threat of the 'Big Tech' brands? How do we introduce important new skills such as project management and change management?

LegalTech in Leeds: Current challenges with legal services & potential opportunities

LegalTech in Leeds – Current challenges with legal services

There are multiple challenges faced by the different types of legal services which prevent the adoption of technology solutions and innovations and continue to limit access to legal advice/support for consumers and businesses.

- The legal services market has been slower to adopt the kinds of innovations that have transformed and enhanced other parts of the economy.
- The legal sector in particular displays a low risk appetite and can often be viewed as “hard to sell to” by the tech sector. Reasons for this include law firms being difficult to access and showcase solutions to as well as there being a lack of understanding by tech firms of the common language used within the legal sector.
- In addition to this, there has been a cut in public funding for legal advice/support which has reduced the accessibility and affordability of legal advice for consumers and businesses. LegalTech in Leeds provides an opportunity to increase awareness of digital legal services amongst customers and businesses.
- This initiative will also provide the opportunity for local tech firms/ entrepreneurs to engage with the legal services market and showcase their tech solutions whilst also creating a collaborative community that is working towards a shared interest of improving access to legal services.

There are multiple opportunities for tech firms to provide solutions to the current challenges faced by the legal services market whilst also improving access to legal advice/support by:

- Helping law firms better integrate and utilise their data so that it can add more value.
- Providing the required tech skills, knowledge and resources to implement digital transformation programmes.
- Helping law firms to satisfy the expectation of digital onboarding / Know Your Customer processes.
- Transforming the current justice system which is not set up for “ordinary people” by making it easier to navigate.
- Helping to educate consumers and businesses on their rights and making them more aware of digital legal services.
- Providing multiple channels of legal advice/support so that it is accessible to varying levels of vulnerability and capability amongst consumers and businesses.
